SNAKE DANCE TAKES PLACE IN HOPI LAND

Mystic Rites of Arizona Indian Tribe Described By Eye-Witness.

By WILLIAM PARKER.
 Cosmopolitan News Service.
 (Copyright, 1922, by Cosmopolitan News Service.)

HOTAVILLE, Hopiland, Aug. 26 (By Indian Courier to Winslow, Ariz., Aug. 31.—This is the day of the mystical snake dance of the superstitious Hopi Indian tribe.

The religious crier at dawn summoned the Indian gods of creation to the devout ceremony. The ragged cliffs echoed and re-echoed the vibrant tones of the sun-bronzed brave silhouetted against the rose-tinted turquoise skyline. It was like a turbaned Muezzin on the far-away shores of the Golden Horn singing from a graceful minaret his Allah Akbar to call the faithful to prayer in the mosque.

The priests, in their brilliant and beplumed ceremonial costumes, are climbing from the narrow opening in the roof of the temple. They file, with rhythmic tread into the plaza, each step being marked by the chanting of sacred songs and the shaking of skin rattles.

The chief priest has given the deadly rattlesnakes their baptismal bath. So now, as each brave passes the chief priest he picks up a snake, grips its scaly body in his teeth, unmindful of its lethal fangs, and begins a weird gyration, the dance of supplication to the rain gods.

Continuing this unique spectacle, the priests circle and recircle the plaza to the accompaniment of devotional hymns and the beating of taut drums.

Priests Scatter Snakes.
 Gradually, and almost unnoticed by the onlookers, the crystal-like clearness of the desert grows dim. The day is dying. Far across the plain the predominating San Francisco peaks seem literally to be leaping up to grasp the sun. On a quarter of it, a disk of burnished copper, is blotted out by a towering peak. It is the signal to end the fervid dancing. Gathering as many of the snakes as they can carry the priests run nimbly down pathways of the mesa to the floor of the desert. To the east, west, north and south they scatter, gently placing the reptiles on the sand as they speed along.

The early morning hours have been given over to fraternal if not entirely sanitary smoking of the priest-blessed pipe of plenty, the pipe being passed from brave to brave as they crouch elbow to elbow in the cramped quarters of the kiva, the temple. Meanwhile, on the floor of the altar has been in the making. Yellow, green, white and red sand—a color for each point in the compass, is sifted by the chief priest until the completed work symbolizes a rainbow. This sand picture represents clouds, and streaked through it are serpentine lines, lightning.

Favored by Lightning.
 The Hopi brave believes that if lightning strikes among the graceful stalks of his growing corn he is one of the favored sons of the rain gods. As the day wears on an ominous stillness settles down upon the adobe village. The air is tense with expectancy.

Treading softly in their moccasined feet, virgins of the tribe are making their way to points of vantage. There is a pleasing tinkle as of tiny silver

Bandit Suspect Who Is Being Sought By D. C. Cops

Joseph Hart, alias Joseph Stewart, and Joseph Connelly, former conductor on the East Capitol street line of the Washington Railway and Electric Company, who lives at 1636 A street northeast, sought by the Washington and Baltimore police in connection with the murder of William B. Norris, of Baltimore, on August 18. Norris was killed while attempting to protect a $25,000 payroll from bandits.

bells as they walk, for Miss Lo, in contrast to her American sister, puts coins of the United States to a queer use. Soldered into small pieces of wire they are used by her as buttons for moccasins and dresses. Her hair tids shines resplendently from copious applications of oil. At her ears her hair is wound in huge coils, symbolic of the squash plant, which in turn is symbolic of purity. The virgin Hopi wears her hair thus until her wedding day, whereupon it is braided in two strands and thereafter hangs in front of her, a thick strand on each side.

So quickly has been the descent of the sun that long, purple shadows even now are blotting out the unattractive detail of the mud-baked houses of the primitive village. Tiny red flames dot the blackening background. The savory odor of appetizing food fills the air. Squaws are preparing the tribal feast.

WOULD PREVENT SALE OF STOLEN SECURITIES
 BUENOS AIRES, Aug. 31.—The international law conference discussed the question of preventing the sale of stolen national securities. Several of the delegates advocated that the league of nations be asked to inaugurate a world publicity system on the question, but the matter was recommitted for further deliberation.

NORTHCLIFFE WILL TO FIGURE IN COURT FIGHT

Executors Plan to Contend Publisher of Unsound Mind When It Was Made.

Universal Service.
 LONDON, Aug. 31.—Sir George Sutton yesterday was appointed administrator of Lord Northcliffe's estate, pending the litigation over the publisher's will. No objection was made to the appointment, the object of which is merely to continue the payment of certain annuities. The vacation court was crowded with eminent lawyers, but the proceedings were brief and formal.

Opposing the will which Lord Northcliffe made on July 22 last, the executors contend that the publisher was of unsound mind at that time, but this issue was not raised today.

Universal Service is informed that under the first will, dated March, 1919, which the executors are propounding against this year's document, Lord Northcliffe made numerous requests to the principal executives of his huge publishing organizations.

Immediately prior to his breakdown, however, libel suits were entered against him by two of the directors of the Daily Mail. Lord Northcliffe retaliated by cancelling the old will and making Lady Northcliffe practically the sole beneficiary.
